

Good morning.

What goes up, must come down. US agriculture sold off a large amount that started off with a gentle move lower around midnight followed by a sharply lower trade around 2-3 am CT. There was no major fundamental headline that prompted commodities to selloff. Yesterday we saw very large ranges in US ag futures, and some are calling for a key reversal. Open interest was down a large amount on Thursday for the soybean complex and corn.

Overnight May contract price ranges as of 5:50 am CT:

Corn 41.25 cents

Soybeans 75.25

Chicago wheat 68.75

KC wheat 51.25

WORLD WEATHER HIGHLIGHTS FOR February 25, 2022

- West-central Africa coffee and cocoa production areas in Ivory Coast and Ghana will receive some welcome rainfall next week that will bolster soil moisture and possibly induce some flowering.
- North Africa and southern Spain are also expecting some precipitation during the coming week to ease their dryness.
- There is no threatening cold coming to Europe or Asia
- The outlook has not changed much today for Australia or South Africa.
- In South America, the outlook is about the same with periods of rain bringing relief to Argentina's dry areas during the coming week with a bout of drier weather in the following weekend.
 - Relief will also come to interior southern Brazil, but not before mid-week next week.
 - Rio Grande do Sul and Uruguay will get some of the rain that will be impacting Argentina this weekend and especially next week.
 - Northern Brazil will be seeing a more restricted rainfall pattern for a while favoring better late season soybean and other crop harvesting.
- In the United States, another morning of threatening cold was noted in the central Plains where spring must be mild and wet to allow the wheat crop time to set new tillers and repair all of the damage from winter.
 - Too much rain and flooding remains an issue for the lower eastern Midwest, northern Delta and Tennessee River Basin areas.
 - Some drying is expected over the coming week, but a more active second week outlook will return the wet conditions possibly leading to some early season planting delays in late March and April - if the wet bias prevails as it is expected to.
