Good morning.

CBOT grains and complex are lower. The US weather forecast improved with additional rain expected for the Midwest next week. The energy markets are lower and are pressuring other commodity markets with fund selling. USDA export sales showed some sales to China, and overall results were mixed.

World Weather Inc.

WORLD WEATHER HIGHLIGHTS FOR JULY 21, 2022

- Concern about Europe remains with another ten days of dryness and heat likely from Slovakia into Greece where unirrigated corn, sorghum, sunseed and soybeans will be stressed because it is already too dry in much of that region today
  - o France will remain a great concern as well with limited rainfall and continued warm weather for a while keeping unirrigated crops stressed
  - Some dryness in the southern U.K., Belgium Netherlands, Spain, Portugal and Italy will also be of interest to the marketplace, but Czech Republic into the Baltic States and Belarus (including Poland) will remain in good shape
- Russia's Southern Region will see periods of rain and drizzle over the next five days and cooler than usual temperatures resulting in improved topsoil moisture and some improved summer crop conditions
- U.S. Midwest crop areas will continue in mostly good shape, despite dry pockets
  - Some relief to developing dryness from Nebraska to Minnesota is expected over the coming week with some rain Friday and more rain during mid-week next week
  - o Relief from dryness in the southwestern Corn Belt and northern Delta is not likely in this first week of the outlook, but some rain is expected in the following week
- Texas and Oklahoma drought and heat stress will continue for the next seven days
  - Some relief may occur late next week and into the early days of August, but confidence is low on the significance of that relief
    - World Weather, Inc. would not be surprised to find future model runs backing off of some of the moisture advertised in the region in future days
- Northwestern U.S. Plains and southwestern Canada's Prairies may dry down for a little while keep some crop stress in place for a while
- Argentina still has a good opportunity for rain next week beginning early in the week

- Two waves of rain are expected that should improve soil moisture for better wheat germination, emergence and establishment, but remember the event is still out several days leaving some time for change
  - Confidence is moderately high that at least some rain will impact the nation's wheat region
- India will experience some flooding rain from Madhya Pradesh into the far northern parts of the nation during the next ten days
  - Gujarat and Rajasthan should be largely missed by the heavier rain, although lighter amounts are expected there to support crop development
- China weather remains mostly good, although drying is expected in the interior southeast for a while
- Australia weather is still supportive of favorable winter crop establishment
